

Division of Agriculture remembers Milo J. Shult for dedication, public service

Milo J. Shult, the longest-serving head of the University of Arkansas System Division of Agriculture, is being remembered for his dedication to improving the lives of Arkansans through research, extension and education, as well as his life of public service.

Shult died Friday, July 19. He was 75. He served as vice president for agriculture for the University of Arkansas System and head of the system's Division of Agriculture from 1992-2010.

Born in Keokuk, Iowa, Shult was raised in the Midwest and obtained degrees from Western Illinois and Iowa State University. He joined the faculty at Texas A&M in 1972 as a wildlife specialist. Shult would go on to serve as an associate director of extension and associate director of the experiment station, two of the three pillars of the land grant universities in the United States. He moved to Arkansas 20 years later to take on the job as vice president for agriculture.

Shult was devoted to the land grant system and firm in his belief of the system's ability to elevate the people it served through research, extension and education. When he took over the reins of the Division of Agriculture, he coined a motto that has been use ever since: "Arkansas is our Campus." It's a phrase that reflects the Division of Agriculture's higher education presence in all 75 Arkansas counties.

In 2011, he was elected to Class XXIV of the Arkansas Agricultural Hall of Fame. His service to agriculture encompassed not just his 20 years in Arkansas, but also his 18 years at Texas A&M.

"Dr. Shult had a profound impact on Arkansas agriculture and the programs of the UA System Division of Agriculture," said Mark Cochran, who succeeded Shult as vice president for agriculture. "He was widely recognized as a leader in issues related to agriculture and rural communities. His leadership was pivotal in guiding the programs on agriculture and food production, environmental stewardship, food and nutrition and the well-being of our families, youth and rural communities.

"Milo Shult loved the land grant system – primarily because he cared so much for the people who could benefit from the programs and for the faculty and staff that contribute so greatly to the quality of those programs," Cochran said. "He touched many lives of both stakeholders and employees."

On the eve of his retirement, he sent a memo to all Division of Agriculture employees. He told them: "My enthusiasm for the job and belief in the importance of the Division's service to the people of the state of Arkansas is as strong as ever.

"There are many things I could say about my time in this office," he said. "However, my one overriding thought is how fortunate I have been and what a privilege it has been to work with you, the faculty and staff of the Division. Your total dedication to helping the people of our state improve their economic condition and quality of life has made this experience, not only the capstone of my career, but also a source of tremendous pride in what you do. We may not be the biggest organization of our kind but I truly believe there is none better when it comes to serving people."

Shult has held several state, regional and national leadership positions. They included serving as chairman of the Board of Agriculture and Farm Bill Committee for the Association of Public and Land-grant Universities, as well as serving as a member of APLU's CREATE 21 Committee. He was past president of the Southern Association of Agricultural Scientists and has served on the National Agricultural Library Board of Directors, the 4-H Natural Resources Program Steering Committee and the U. S. Department of Agriculture Natural Resource National Initiative Task Force. He served on the Arkansas Agriculture Department Advisory Board, the Arkansas Commission on the Coordination of Educational Efforts, and was chair of the Winthrop Rockefeller Institute Board. (e)

Burnett wins Governor's Award, highest honor in Arkansas 4-H

Sagely Burnett was honored on July 24 as the Arkansas 4-H Governor's Award winner, the youth development program's highest honor.

The honor was bestowed during a ceremony during Arkansas 4-H State O-Rama. Burnett was one of four finalists for this award following a very demanding application and interview process.

This spring, she was selected as the 2019 inductee to the Arkansas 4-H Hall of Fame. She is majoring in agriculture business, with an emphasis on pre-law at the University of Arkansas. Among her many achievements, Burnett represented Arkansas in national competitions seven times, was a state 4-H ambassador and an Arkansas 4-H State Officer at Large. She has been self-employed since 2010, raising and selling dairy goats, dairy cattle and commercial swine.

Sagely Burnett, a 4-H member from Winslow, Ark., was named winner of the Governor's Award.

To Our Extension Retirees

August is about half way cooked and most of us already wish it was over, at least the heat and humidity part. Unless you are a certain insect or fungus, August weather is tough in Arkansas.

Lately, it has also been tough to see some of our friends pass forward. I was able to attend the services of Gordon Barnes, Dr. Milo Shult and noted the legacy of Jimmy Bradley. I knew Gordon the best and the longest, as he was one of my father-in-law's best friends and I first got to know him in 1974 when I was an undergraduate student and he was speaking to one of our classes about the exciting world of cotton insect management. His storytelling was impressive, and I am related to some great storytellers in the hills. But his adventures and stories stuck with me over the years, and I would run into Gordon time to time, and he remains one of the most original, caring and genuinely good people I have been lucky enough to have known. He lived the life, and inspired many of us in the work we chose. He always thought about and cared for his Extension family.

I worked with Dr. Shult for many years and he influenced me professionally in so many ways. I could not begin to add his influences together over time, and I dare say that would apply to many of us who worked with the Division during the 1990 - 2010 era - the Shult Years as it were. He set his brand on the organization and evidence of his leadership is very visible in the state today, and will be for generations. His was certainly an important and memorable life.

I did not personally know Mr. Bradley, but if you know anybody in Cleburne County, you will certainly have heard of him. As county agent, he took his community and community development very seriously, and became well known for creative ways to improve the vigor and sustainability of where he lived, his community. His legacy is also evident in family, friends and the fact that Heber Springs and Cleburne County among other places — are better today because of his journey.

We honor their legacy and we do not forget.

Speaking of journey, mine as Extension Director will end by June 30, 2020, as I enter retirement at that time. It has been a singular privilege to serve in this and many other roles for the Division of Agriculture and the Cooperative Extension Service, but I am close to done and I really need to take care of some family stuff before too much more time passes. We will keep on working as hard as possible to keep our progress going, and to find a leader with the right temperament, vision and fit to help this great work achieve even greater heights. In this context, I want to say thanks right now to all of our retirees for their continual support, good will and positive attitude while I finish up my part in this play over the next ten months and please know that I am always available if you need anything.

Have a great August if you don't burn up! (e)
