Start a Business, Stay at Home

If you're thinking of starting a home-based business for a little extra cash, you might be surprised. For some farm families, the "pocket money" has become a big source of income.

For Ann Kerley, the greenhouse business started as something to do in the farm's off season. Vicki Dye's business grew from efforts to peddle her own crafts.

Nannette Hornsby's riding stables were a way to shoulder expenses to maintain the family's riding horses. And Mary Ahrends just wanted to hear the ring of laughter again in her childhood home.

What all these folks have in common is a moneymaking business based right in their homes. The best part of being at home, they say, is schedule flexibility, freedom from control by others, potential for financial independence, and no commuting to an off-farm job.

Some drawbacks do exist, though.

"There are long hours," says Vicki Dye. She runs J. V. Dye and Associates, a giftware and accessory manufacturers' representative business, from her family's corn and bean farm in Bristow, Iowa.

"You have to deal well with pressure and learn how to separate the business from distractions at home," she says. Discipline is the key, Dye claims, along with goals and a high degree of motivation.

Pumpkin Hollow

I've been searching through old pictures preparing for a presentation at the Arkansas Agritourism Conference. I have had a lot of fun rolling down Memory
