

Alexander and the Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Day

JUDITH VIORST

Illustrated by RAY CRUZ

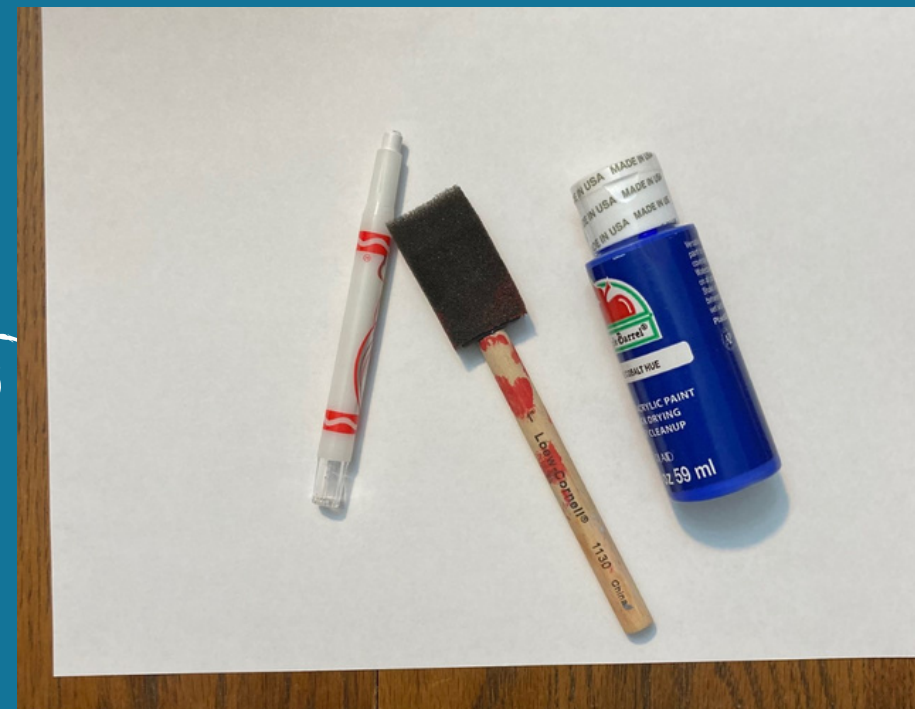

Invisible Art

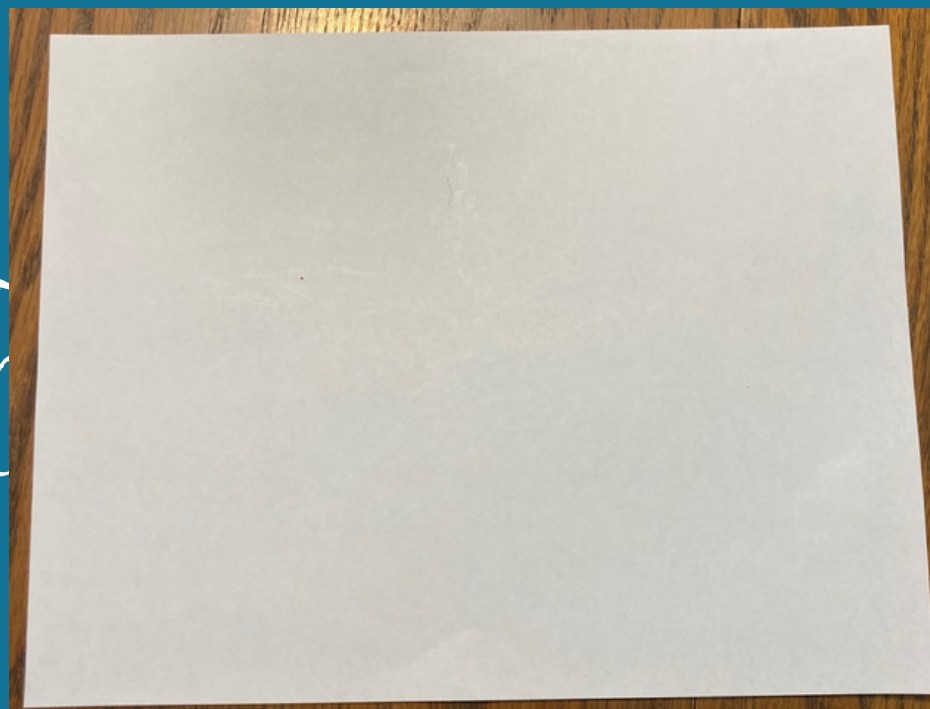

In "Alexander and the Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Day", Alexander draws an invisible castle. With this activity, children can make invisible pictures become visible

Items needed:

- White paper
- One color of paint
- Water
- Paintbrush
- White crayon

Gather supplies!

Using the white crayon, draw a picture on the white paper. (Or allow the children to draw the picture, depending on their age)

Combine water and paint so that the paint is thin, to almost watercolor consistency. Paint over the picture with the paint so that it will appear.