Garden Phlox

James Robbins Professor - Ornamentals

Rick Cartwright Professor - Plant Pathologist

Garden phlox (Phlox paniculata L.) is a popular, full-sun perennial that is native to open woodland sites from upstate New York across to Michigan and down to Arkansas and Tennessee. The retail trade offers at least 50 cultivars, which were selected for disease resistance and variation in flower or leaf color. In Arkansas, garden phlox typically flowers from late May through mid-October. The average length of flowering is 18 weeks. Individual flowers, approximately 1 inch in diameter, consist of five colorful petals attached to a long tube. The 3- to 4-inch diameter, domeshaped terminal inflorescence consists of 20 to 40 flowers. Flowers come in a variety of colors including white, pink, purple, orange and bicolored.

The average plant size is 40 inches tall by 23 inches wide. Leaf color is typically a medium green, but variegated-leaf cultivars are available. Garden phlox grows best in full sun in a good, fertile soil that is moist but not wet. Plants are typically situated at the middle or back of a mixed perennial border. To keep plants from becoming overcrowded, the clump should be divided every three or four years in the spring before new growth starts. After blooming, the old flowers should be removed (dead-headed) to prevent reseeding in the garden.

Garden phlox possesses many desirable ornamental characteristics but has one serious problem, powdery mildew disease. Caused by Erysiphe cichoracearum L., powdery mildew is a common fungal problem on P. paniculata. Phlox plants are infected during mid-spring and early fall when temperatures are near 60°F. Signs include a white powdery mass of spores and hyphae on the upper and lower leaf surfaces and the stem. As the plant grows and temperatures remain cool, the pathogen infects new growth. The disease does not typically interfere with flowering but can cause disfigured flowers. Although the disease does not kill the plant outright, it can weaken it.

Phlox cultivars vary in susceptibility to powdery mildew (Table 1), and the disease can be controlled with fungicides, biological agents and resistant cultivars.

Cultivars that are rated as resistant or very resistant ('Red Magic,' 'David,' 'Eden's Crush,' 'Darwin's Joyce,' 'Blue Boy,' 'Robert Poore' and 'Delta Snow') would likely require no fungicide treatment for powdery mildew when grown in Arkansas.

Following are photographs of various phlox varieties.
